Licence fees for the use of DIN Standards in an in-house electronic network
(Intranet)

In order to save the DIN-Standards (except DIN-VDE-Standards) in an in-house-electronical network, the user has to pay an annual licensing fee (according to the tables attached) if the company does not have the DIN-Membership. The licence fees are charged by the Beuth Verlag GmbH. The amount of the licence fees depends on the number of DIN-Standards, which are integrated into the network and the size of the enterprise. The licensee is obliged to report those parameters annually to the licensor.

The DIN-Standards in electronic form (except DIN-VDE-Standards) are used in the following way: (please fill in):

- at a single workplace
- in a network

- number of employees :
- number of standards :

Licence fees for the use of DIN Standards in an in-house electronic network (Intranet)

Valid as 2012-01-01

DIN Standards (except DIN VDE Standards) in electronic formats, e. g. as PDF files, may only be used by non-members, and members of DIN who have not paid an annual lump sum reproduction fee, at a single workplace. Making copies of, or printing out, such DIN Standards is only permitted within the narrow limits of copyright law.

Non-members, and members of DIN who have not paid an annual lump sum reproduction fee, may acquire the right to place DIN Standards in their in-house network, and to make printed copies for in-house purposes, on payment of a special licence fee that is to be paid annually to DIN. The amount of licence fee to be paid depends in the size of the company (by number of employees) and the number of DIN Standards to be stored in the system.
